

U.S. Department of State Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration

2016

In Fiscal Year 2016, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM) contributed

More than $3.4 billion

to humanitarian efforts globally, the majority of which went to overseas humanitarian assistance and refugee resettlement.

Resettlement

PRM spent nearly $545 million to provide new beginnings to the world's most vulnerable refugees.

Assistance

More than $2.8 billion

of PRM funding was devoted to humanitarian assistance overseas.

The United States has welcomed more than 3.3 million refugees for resettlement since 1975.

That's more than ten times the population of Pittsburgh!

What kind of help does our funding provide?

Shelter and Education

Our funding supports education programs to ensure that displaced and refugee children are able to learn, and helps provide much-needed shelter for those who have fled their homes.

Food & Water

Thanks to U.S. assistance, millions of refugees and internally displaced people receive life-saving food and clean water.

Protection

The United States is a leader in protecting the rights of refugees and displaced people overseas, and in seeking to protect refugees from physical harm.

Resettlement

The U.S. has always been a world leader in the resettlement of refugees. The U.S. Refugee Admissions Program gives the world's most vulnerable refugees a safe new beginning, far from violence and persecution.

Where does our assistance go?

These five organizations received the majority of PRM's overseas humanitarian assistance, providing life-saving care and services for vulnerable people around the world.

Did you know?

The United States is the world's single largest donor to UNHCR, UNRWA, ICRC, and IOM.

Where did we provide support?

Funding for overseas humanitarian assistance covered six geographical regions across the globe; nearly 80% of all assistance was focused in three areas.

Near East: More than

$1.3 billion

This includes assistance to refugees and internally displaced people in Syria and Iraq, among other areas.

Africa: More than

$776 million

Humanitarian aid to vulnerable people in Africa represented over one quarter of all PRM assistance.

South Asia: More than

$124 million

Assistance to millions of vulnerable refugees, stateless persons, and internally displaced people in nations such as Afghanistan and Pakistan was our third most significant.
